The Salisbury Farmers Market will come to an end on September 25. However, we will be closed September 4 for the holiday. We will continue to have fresh farm eggs, homemade jams and jellies, homemade bread, honey and honey byproducts, maple syrup, soaps and lotions, mustards as well as homemade pies, bead jewelry, woven goods, and antiques. a new addition to the list of vegetables that we had this year. Music was a pleasant addition to our group. John Lessard and Kim Dumont from town entertained us with the guitar and singing. We will be at the Town Hall in Salisbury on Route 4 every Monday from now until the end of September except holidays. The hours are 3 to 6 P.M.. It has been a pleasure to serve the community and we are looking forward to seeing many of you in September and again next year. Colonial Pharmacy Moving to New Location

Press Release

Colonial Pharmacy, New London's 50-year-old pharmacy and variety store is moving from its current location in the New London Shopping Center and building its own new state-of-the-art facility one quarter-mile away on Newport Road. They are expected to be in their new location by Fall 2017.

Bill Faccone founded Colonial Pharmacy in 1967. It was originally located in the building now occupied by Hubert's Family Outfitters, on the corner of Newport Road and County Road. In 1987, when the Cricenti family moved their grocery store (now Hannaford's) into a new facility across the New London Shopping Center, Bill Faccone relocated to Cricenti's former location which has been the home of Colonial Pharmacy until the present. Bill Faccone retired in 1990 and sold the business to employees Randy Doerr and Vern Bailey. In 2016, Vern sold his interest to Glenn Perreault who had been a pharmacist with Colonial since 1993.

Colonial Pharmacy is an essential shopping destination in the New London area. The current building is 12,000 square feet and, in addition to the pharmacy services and over-the-counter products, it offers a large selection of merchandise such as toys, housewares, clothing, stationery goods, small appliances and arts and crafts supplies. It's been said locally, "If you can't find it at Colonial, you probably don't need it!" The new building will have 14,000 square feet adding specialty space in the pharmacy area for a compounding lab and a consultation room for immunizations, brace fittings, diabetic footwear and a drive-up.

At a time when small independent pharmacies struggle to compete with the larger chains, Colonial Pharmacy has found success by affiliating itself with HealthMart, a network of independent pharmacists, that negotiates with pharmaceutical companies to keep drug costs comparable to the chains and helps facilitate working with more than 300 insurance plans. Randy Doerr and Glenn Perreault believe it isn't just about competing with the mail order services and chain pharmacies. Glenn says, "We take care of people here. When I get home at night, I know I've helped our customers."

Graduates Receive New Hampshire Red Sox Service Scholarships

Press Release

Forty-seven recent graduates of New Hampshire public high schools were recently honored with New Hampshire Red Sox Service Scholarships on the field at Fenway in partnership with the Ford Fund and New England Ford Dealers. Included in the forty-seven graduates were Tylor Austin of Danbury, Sarah Young of Wilmot, and Brianna Judkins of Franklin.

Students were presented with their scholarships at a recent home game at Fenway Park against the Cleveland Indians. As a sponsor of the program David Abatsis, of the Ford Motor Company Fund, was on the field to help present the students with their awards. Also in attendance was New Hampshire Governor Chris Sununu who congratulated the students for their hard work. This is the scholarship program's eighth year in New Hampshire. It was first launched in the Granite State in 2010 and now runs in all five New England states outside of Massachusetts. The $1,000 Red Sox Service Scholarships are awarded to students based on academic performance, financial aid eligibility, and demonstrated community service.

The Ford – Red Sox partnership also supported Ford's Driving Skills For Life New England tour by donating Red Sox raffle tickets and displaying the World Series trophies for members of the community who attended the free event and made a donation of peanut butter to their local Feeding America food bank.
