

Andover Energy Group Announces Availability of Green Car Guide

Press release

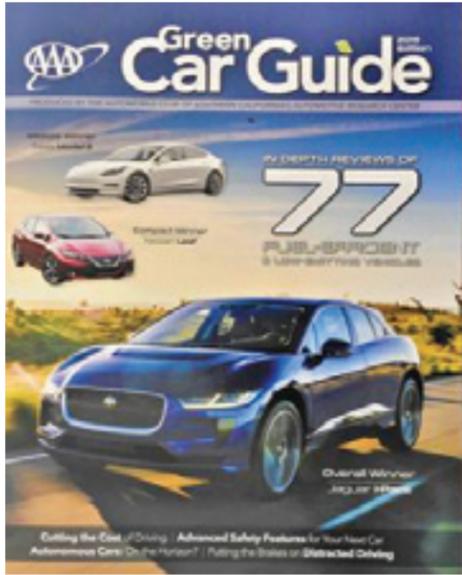

Interested in exploring the world of “green” vehicles, including fuel-efficient, gasoline-powered vehicles, along with electric, hybrid, diesel, and alternative-fueled vehicles?

If so, visit either of the public libraries in Andover and ask to see the 2019 edition of the American Automobile Association’s (AAA) 212-page “Green Car Guide.” There you’ll find in-depth reviews of 77 fuel-efficient and low-emitting cars, SUVs, vans and trucks, along with comparative ratings for each.

The AAA office in Concord made copies of the Guide available to the Andover Energy Group for distribution to the town’s libraries. The book’s contents are also viewable at <https://newsroom.aaa.com/wp-content/uploads/2019/GreenCarGuide/#page=1>. Hard copies are available free to AAA members at any AAA office.

Energy Group members note that the number of energy-efficient vehicles in town is growing at what appears to be a modest pace. Beacon readers who would like to learn about their owners’ experiences are invited to send an email to andoverenergy@gmail.com for a referral.

“I had applied to graduate school already, but the grant and the amazing professors I have had as an undergraduate were my push to stay at UNH for this program,” Comrie says. “The encouragement I’ve received has been fantastic.”

The notion of having social workers in primary care practices has been promoted in the health field for some time now. Comrie sees the alliance of mental and medical health providers as a huge win for patients.

“People have come to realize that mental health is as important as physical health, and that they often go hand-in-hand,” Comrie says.

In her time at UNH, Comrie has been a resident’s assistant in Congreve and Lord Halls, and a community educator for SHARPP. She was also a teaching assistant in social work classes where juniors had to learn how to conduct one-on-one counseling sessions. And she’s a member of Phi Alpha Honor Society, the social work honor society, and was the student supervisor at the MUB ticket office.

Comrie interned at the Joan Lovereing Health Center in Greenland, New Hampshire, working with clients seeking reproductive and sexual health services. In June she started her graduate internship at New Hampshire’s Counseling Associates as a clinical mental health counselor for teens and adolescents with substance use/misuse disorders. The counseling group has offices in Claremont, Hanover, New London, and Newport. Comrie will spend time in all but the Newport location.

“When I finish with my master’s degree, I am hoping to do clinical work in a hospital or medical practice,” Comrie says. “And I plan on getting my license and being an LCSW (licensed clinical social worker) at some point down the road. Being licensed will provide me with a plethora of options.”
